

Client Alert

UPDATE - New York Workforce Reduction Increased to 100%

March 22, 2020

Governor Cuomo signed has signed three Executive Orders (202-6, 202-7 and 202-8) (the "Orders"), that require employers in New York State to reduce their in-person workforce by 100%, effective Sunday, March 22 at 8:00 p.m. There are limited exceptions to the workforce reduction rules for "essential businesses". The Orders are currently in effect through April 19, 2020.

Exceptions:

- The Orders continue to provide that businesses designated as "essential businesses" can maintain employment at "full capacity", despite the mandatory 100% workforce reduction. A list of those businesses is included at the end of this Alert.
- The scope of the original exceptions has been expanded to entities "providing essential services or functions whether to an essential business or a non-essential business".
 - Businesses in this new category may "operate at the level necessary to provide such service or function" – not at full capacity the way "essential businesses" can.
 - This new category appears to allow on-site support for services such as logistics, mail and shipping, technology support for online services and general maintenance, even for non-essential businesses, although this is not entirely clear.
 - Further guidance is expected that could expand or narrow the new exception. A continued surge in reported COVID 19 cases may lead to greater restrictions.
 - In the interim, any request that employees report for work on-site, (i.e. not remotely) should be strictly limited to essential services. The New York Attorney General has urged employees to file complaints against employers who violate the Orders. See: <https://ag.ny.gov/press-release/2020/attorney-general-james-urges-employees-file-complaints-against-employers-ignoring>

If your business is not on the list below, you can still seek a designation as an "essential business" from the Empire State Development Corporation. The form for requesting such a designation is at https://esd.ny.gov/sites/default/files/Request%20for%20Designation%20Form_0.pdf. We are glad to assist if you intend to seek a formal designation.

Should you have any questions about the Orders, including whether your business falls within one of the exceptions to the Orders, or any other employment issue related to COVID-19, please contact any of the lawyers listed below. We are here to help.
